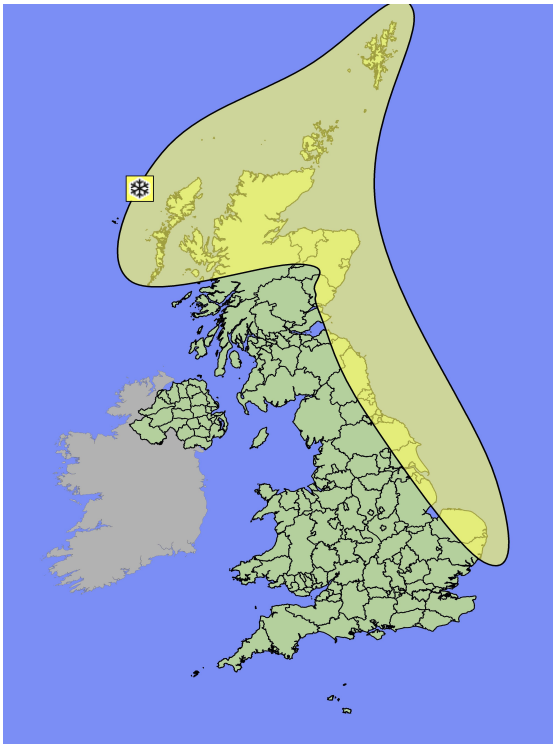
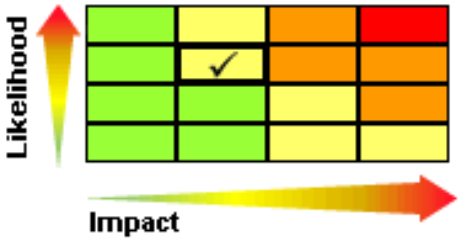
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Cold northerly winds will continue to feed wintry showers in across windward coasts during the rest of Wednesday and into early Thursday. Snow accumulations by day should be slight and very temporary, though falling temperatures overnight mean that icy patches and some accumulations of a few cm are possible. Many of the showers across Scotland will clear soon after midnight, though the risk of residual icy patches remains into Thursday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 18:00 on Wed, 13th Mar 2013 until 09:00 on Thu, 14th Mar 2013

Snow showers will continue to affect parts of northern and eastern Scotland and eastern coastal areas of England on Wednesday night and into Thursday morning. Localised accumulations of snow become more likely as temperatures fall on Wednesday evening, with 1-2cm possible in places at low-level, and perhaps 2-5cm on some higher ground. Icy stretches may also develop on some roads and pavements.

The public should be aware of the potential for minor disruption, especially to travel.
